Mike Stimson is a professionally qualified and experienced coach and facilitator with substantial experience both in Europe and consulting overseas. Cross cultural awareness and virtual team working, together with an ability to communicate to other nationalities clearly and simply in International English, underpin Mike's consultancy and coaching work.

His range of practice includes organizational development consultancy, team facilitation and coaching and organizational design, as well as the production of on-line materials and the leading of skills workshops.

Mike has facilitated the development of top teams and high flyers, provided consulting support and co-design for a pan-European technical support system, and worked with senior teams to produce a new organizational service for HR.

He has designed and delivered workshops in Europe, Africa and Latin America on influencing skills, cross-cultural management, virtual teams, managing people, facilitation skills and coaching for managers.

Mike's client list includes global corporations such as Borealis, British Petroleum, Shell, Sun Microsystems, as well as non-corporates such as the British Council, the University of London and several large charity organizations in the UK.

Mike is a Fellow of the Chartered Institute of Personnel Development and a Member of the European Mentoring and Coaching Council. His written work includes being the co-author of Management in English Language Teaching published by Cambridge University Press.

Mike has a Diploma in Leadership, Mentoring and Executive Coaching from the UK's Institute of Leadership and Management and a Postgraduate Diploma in Human Resource Management.
